

inside

Pacific Northwest Edition • Spring 2013

Wacky Scholarships

Page 3

View advice videos from our student contributors on these pages and more!

Putting the brakes on distracted driving

Page 4

The Real Story on life after high school

Page 9

Being adaptable to meet life changes

Page 5

¡Página en Español! Page 9

College Debt:

Is it worth it?

Many weighing the wisdom of borrowing for degree say it still can be a smart investment.

To fill out our survey visit: <http://www.studentpaths.com/studentimpactsurvey/>

Central Washington University

LEARN.

Students come to CWU for personalized education and leading programs in applied engineering, aviation, business, earth science, education, music, and paramedicine.

DO.

Hands-on experience—in the field and around the world—prepares CWU graduates to be effective professionals in the global economy.

LIVE.

CWU graduates are leading communities and building prosperity as engineers, business leaders, astronauts, teachers, four-star generals, and Hollywood legends.

Gaining knowledge through travel

— by Flora Richards-Gustafson

Trotting the globe can offer adventure, growth, new friends and greater self-confidence. Being worldly wise might even give you an edge in the job market.

plane back then, you know? ... I don't regret any penny I spent for my travels. I got to see so many countries before wars or politics made them into hostile lands or unsafe for tourists. Everyone I met was so friendly, and I'm still pen pals with some people and their families, and we send each other pictures and postcards. You can't put a price on memories and friends."

How to pay for your travels?

Depending on the way you choose to travel and your destination, it can cost up to $20,000 (not including airfare) to spend a semester abroad. This includes room and board, tuition, taxes and travel insurance. If you're going with a college program, your school may offer scholarships, grants and/or financial aid to help fund your adventure.

If you're traveling with the military, Uncle Sam pays for your ticket, room and board. However, you generally don't have a say about your destination.

When traveling as a volunteer, you may have to pay for your own plane ticket, depending on the organization and the type of work you're going to do. If you do have to buy your own ticket, fund-raisers can help cover the cost.

Young people in many countries receive all kinds of discounts—from free museum passes to discounted train tickets. Plus, many hostels (inexpensive, dorm-like hotels) only offer rooms to young people.

In the words of writer Henry Miller, "One's destination is never a place, but rather a new way of looking at things." There is no substitute for the experiences traveling provides. When the world is your teacher, you never stop learning. 🌍

Travel options abound

There are several ways to travel abroad or within your own country. Here are a few to consider.

✈ Flying solo

It isn't for everyone, but you can do what you want when you want. Whether backpacking through Europe or riding a train across the States, traveling alone can help you learn about yourself and create an opinion about the world that's your own.

✈ Group travel

From going on a road trip to staying in Central American hostels, traveling with a group is a great lesson about compromise and communication, and a memorable bonding experience.

✈ College programs

Many universities with global studies programs give college credit for study abroad. Programs can include participating in an exchange program, completing a work experience project or taking classes in a university as an international student.

✈ Military travel

You never know where the military will take you if you enlist. You may have the chance to travel to and work in places like Germany, Hawaii, Greece, Brazil, Japan, Italy or the United Kingdom. Much of the international work the military does involves peacekeeping and humanitarian support.

✈ Volunteer programs

The American Red Cross often looks for volunteers to help with disaster relief services. Development agencies, such as World Vision, look for people to help with ongoing projects, like building a school in an African village. After you graduate from college, the Peace Corps offers the opportunity to travel, get work experience and earn some cash.

The Roman philosopher Seneca said, "Travel and change of place impart new vigor to the mind." The years after you graduate from high school are some of the most ideal to see the world. You're still trying to learn who you want to be as you get a grasp of how the world works. When you travel, you gain a new frame of reference for understanding your role in society, are exposed to new cultures, step into the unknown, dispel myths, reinforce your beliefs and discover who you are as a leader.

In addition to the opportunities traveling provides to discover new cultures, foods, and languages, there are hidden benefits of traveling while you're young.

Traveling can help you stand out when you apply for a job because you will have experience interacting with different cultures and viewpoints. Plus, travel offers a time for growth as you learn how to manage your budget and fend for yourself. When seeking a job, your worldly experiences could give you an edge.

Meet new people

If you step out of your comfort zone and reach out to the residents, you might find yourself with new friends. While travel guides tell you where to find the best restaurants and attractions, the locals are truly the ones in the know. Plus, one perk of a long-distance friendship is having a free place to stay when you return.

Roy Michales, now retired, enjoyed traveling as a young person: "Back in my time, traveling to exotic places in the world was a privilege and gave you an adventurous flair. You dressed up when you flew on an air-

VIDEOS

Student contributor Chris Garling advises avoiding tourist spots and hanging out with the locals instead. <http://bit.ly/UxH009>

Student contributor Anjelica Enaje says travel of any kind can help you boost social interaction and self-confidence. <http://bit.ly/ZIZMoZ>

A liberal arts college with a global reach, Lewis & Clark offers exceptional opportunities for international and environmental learning and student-faculty collaboration. Located in beautiful Portland, Oregon, we also provide ideal pre-professional preparation for law, engineering, medicine, education, and business.

Wacky scholarships

Duck Calling Contest Scholarship	Diabetes Scholars Foundation	Play! Pokemon Championship	Natural Redhead Scholarship	Bowling Scholarship
If you've got a great duck call and need a scholarship, get to Stuttgart, Ark., in late November. Participants in their annual duck calling contest compete for a total of $4,250 in scholarship money.	Managing the challenges of diabetes? These scholarships recognize students involved in the diabetes community for high academic performance and community and/or extracurricular activities.	Play! Pokemon championship series events feature scholarship awards for top finishers. Scholarships are awarded at Regional Championships, National Championships, and the World Championships.	A scholarship for redheads had long been an urban legend until a natural redhead got fed up with the false promise and decided to actually start one.	Thought football and basketball were the only sports where you could gain a scholarship? The United States Bowling Congress awards more than $6 million in scholarships each season.
$2,000 for first place, $1,000 second, $750 third, $500 fourth	39 awards at $5,000, 1 at $4,000, 6 at $1,000	Varies with tournament level; prizes for the 2013 National Championship include a $5,000 scholarship for 1st place.	$250	Varies with each scholarship, but some are in the thousands of dollars.
High school seniors	High school seniors with Type 1 diabetes seeking higher education at an accredited four-year university, college, technical or trade school.	Play! Pokemon events are divided into three age divisions. Competitors in good standing are welcome to compete.	Natural redheads who reside in the United States, are a junior or senior in high school, have a GPA above 2.5, and are applying to a two- or four-year college.	Students who participate in United States Bowling Congress (USBC).
See site for 2013 date, still to be determined	May 15	Based on dates of the regional and world championships	May 1, 2013	Varies with scholarship
 http://bit.ly/TKXeip	 http://bit.ly/Ybi2gC	 http://bit.ly/Vi8xtC	 http://bit.ly/UwDxZr	 http://bit.ly/X7e7QN

How much?

When's it due?

discover.

Connect with the world in service and learning as you study the liberal arts, education, optometry, health professions or business.

pacificu.edu/discover

ARTS & SCIENCES | OPTOMETRY | EDUCATION | HEALTH PROFESSIONS | BUSINESS

800-677-6712 | admissions@pacificu.edu

Oregon's most popular small/mid-sized university.

WOU's small classes, dynamic academic programs and focus on student success equals a world-class personalized education.

- National recognition for excellence and innovation
- Starting in fall 2012, new WOU undergrads can choose from two tuition options: the guaranteed Western Tuition Promise, or the Tuition Choice which has a lower starting tuition rate that will increase annually.
- More than 50 undergraduate academic programs
- NCAA Division II Athletics
- First LEED platinum large-scale, new construction residence hall in America
- Western Undergraduate Exchange: Residents of these 14 states: Alaska, Arizona, California, Colorado, Hawaii, Idaho, Montana, Nevada, New Mexico, North Dakota, South Dakota, Utah, Washington and Wyoming, and from the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands can qualify to receive a reduction in non-resident tuition upon admission.

345 Monmouth Ave. N. • Monmouth, OR 97361 • 1-877-877-1593 • wou.edu

Put the brakes on distracted driving — by By Flora Richards-Gustafson

While all distractions are dangerous – and often deadly – texting is the worst.

Distracted driver, no survivor. In 2009, over 3,000 people were killed and about 416,000 were injured in auto collisions caused by distracted drivers, according to Distraction.gov. Many teens can't wait to get a license, but a huge responsibility that comes with it is distraction-free driving—a topic that's often neglected.

A distraction is anything that takes your eyes off the road: using a phone, talking to others in the car, applying makeup, using a GPS system, eating, or adjusting the radio. While all distractions endanger the lives of those in your car, in the cars around you and bystanders, the most dangerous is texting.

Driving requires three skills: visual, cognitive (judgment and perception) and manual (hands at “10 and 2”). Texting requires the same skills. See the problem? It takes at least four to six seconds to send or receive a text. At 55 mph, you can drive the length of a football field in six seconds. Would you drive that far blindfolded?

✓ The facts: scary but true

- Car accidents are the No. 1 cause of teen deaths, and distracted driving is one of the greatest contributors to this statistic.
- Of fatal crashes that involved drivers under age 20, 16 percent of the drivers reported being distracted. This figure is probably higher, though, because it can be hard to admit that cell phone use caused an accident.
- Any driver using a hand-held device (phone, MP3 player or GPS) is four times more likely to be in a collision that injures the driver.
- Crashes caused by drivers who were texting are 23 times worse than those caused by drivers who weren't distracted.
- When you drive and use a cell phone at the same time, your brain is 37 percent less focused on driving safely. In the United States, a crash occurs every 24 seconds because of a driver who is using a cell phone.

✓ Adding alcohol to the mix

Since 1991, teen drinking and driving has gone down by 54 percent.

Still, teens drink and drive about 2.4 million times per month. Young people are already three times more likely to be in fatal crashes than drivers with more experience. Of teens involved in fatal crashes in 2010, 20 percent had alcohol in their systems.

Even with a blood alcohol concentration (BAC) of 0.02 percent, your brain starts to relax (making it harder to practice good judgment); it gets harder to do more than one task at a time, and your eyes don't focus as well. At 0.08 percent, your brain doesn't detect danger well, it's hard to concentrate and process information, your memory gets weak and your coordination is impaired. The higher your BAC, the more you endanger lives.

✓ Distracted driving can be the worst

Studies have found distracted drivers can be more dangerous than drunk drivers. In an episode of TV's “MythBusters,” aired originally in 2005, hosts Adam Savage and Kari Byron failed road safety tests while driving with a BAC just below 0.08 percent and on separate occasions while using a cell phone. Both received worse scores when they drove using cell phones. The folks at Car and Driver magazine had similar results when they did their own drunk driving versus distracted driving tests. At the end of the MythBusters segment, Savage noted that you can remedy distracted driving by putting away your cell phone, but you can't get sober in an instant.

✓ What you can do

Crashes caused by distracted or drunk drivers are 100 percent preventable. Choose to never use your phone (and to eliminate other distractions) when you drive, and to never drive drunk. Let your parents and friends know that if you don't answer your phone or their texts right away, it's because you're driving. 🚗

This article includes information from the U.S. Department of Transportation, National Center for Statistics and Analysis, MONASH University Accident Research Center, Distraction.gov, National Safety Council, National Center for Statistics and Analysis, TeenDriverSource.org, Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, University of Utah News Center, MythBusters Database, and CarandDriver.com.

Student contributor Jelani Hayes shares steps she takes to ensure she's not distracted while driving.
<http://bit.ly/YstGTO>

Life. Experienced.

It's what makes Mount St. Mary's College in Los Angeles so different.

There's so much more to college than classroom and textbooks. Life is just waiting to be experienced. Mount St. Mary's College gives you the freedom to take your education well beyond the ordinary, and into real-world adventure you won't find anywhere else. Join us.

Merit scholarships up to $16,000 per year
16:1 class sizes ✱ Full curriculum; graduate on time
Small, private college feel on two stunning campuses

Learn more at msmc.la.edu

WP
WARNER PACIFIC COLLEGE

A forward-thinking
urban experience;
another way of exploring God's calling.

LEARN MORE AT WARNERPACIFIC.EDU

PORTLAND, OR

Being adaptable helps you hit life's curveballs

— by Rebecca VanderMeulen

As the saying goes, the only constant in life is change.

Your life will see a lot of changes over the next few years – many you are planning on, and some that you're not. After high school you might head off to college or join the military. Your friends might move to different cities, and you'll have a chance to make new ones. Your future holds exciting adventures, and probably a few unexpected setbacks.

Janet Oberholtzer, an author who lives near Mohnton, Pa., has led a life full of changes. She was raised to follow a strict form of the Mennonite faith. Her family had electricity and drove cars, but used few other modern conveniences. As a young woman she married a Mennonite man who shared her desire to live a different life.

"The world is a big place, and I wanted to explore it," Oberholtzer says. "We wanted to do more. We wanted to have basic things like TV, and to wear jeans."

In an instant

Then in 2004, Oberholtzer, her husband and three sons were driving across the country when their motor home was hit during a six-vehicle accident. She awoke 12 days later in a hospital to see a big chunk of her left leg missing.

Oberholtzer also had a punctured lung and shattered pelvis. More than two-thirds of the skin and tissue between her left knee and ankle was gone. After many surgeries, she walked with help about three months after the crash. She was able to run again in 2008 and took part in a marathon in 2012.

"I realized that life was going to go by whether I was living it or not," says Oberholtzer, author of the memoir "Because I Can: Doing what I can, with what I have, where I am."

It can be scary when your life doesn't go as planned. But it's bound to happen sometime. Maybe you won't get accepted to your dream college. Maybe you'll change your mind about what you want to do after you graduate. That's OK.

VIDEO

Student contributor Abby Johnson: Keep an open mind to the changes bound to come with the transition from high school to college. <http://bit.ly/Xj11AE>

Meeting the unexpected

Sheri Gazitt, a teen life coach in Redmond, Wash., says you shouldn't give up on your dreams if something changes on your way there.

"Failure or a change in plans is just a stepping stone to something better," Gazitt says. "There is more than one path to a goal."

Your life will change in many ways once you leave high school. Of those who go on to college, some figures say that 80 percent switch their majors at least once. Balancing classes, work, extracurricular activities and free time is a lot harder in college than in high school. To be a successful college student, it's important to be open-minded, willing to try new things and adaptable to change.

"It's OK to change your mind," says Chip Parker, director of retention at Drury University in Springfield, Mo. "There are definitely many opportunities that will come your way."

How adaptable people think

Gazitt says adaptable people understand that achieving a goal takes hard work. They're also able to deal with unforeseen obstacles.

Oberholtzer adds that coping with change means trusting yourself. It doesn't matter what other people think of your choices as long as they're right for you, she says.

At the same time, she says, it's important to allow others to make choices for themselves. Oberholtzer still gets along with her relatives and respects their religious beliefs. "I don't discount what they do or try to change who they are," she says.

Taking big steps can be frightening, but it gets easier to cope with change the more you do it, according to Oberholtzer.

"Every time I push forward, I'm always glad I did," she says.

Pushing forward after a terrible car crash, Janet Oberholtzer is the author of "Because I Can: Doing what I can, with what I have, where I am."

Everyone has a Calling...

ENGAGE YOUR FAITH

Deepen your knowledge, engage your faith and put your talents into action. Everyone has a calling... What's Calling You?

f t r @

Find your answer at nwc.edu

NCU
NORTHWEST CHRISTIAN UNIVERSITY
Wisdom • Faith • Service

828 E. 11th Ave,
Eugene, OR, 97401
541-684-7201

OUR PURPOSE IS TO HELP YOU LIVE YOURS.

Get your QR code scanner and watch the video

College Debt: Is it worth it?

— by Flora Richards-Gustafson

Students and experts weigh the pros and cons of taking out loans to pay for college. While many say it's still a good investment, they also are looking to limit the debt load.

“I’m going to be in a lot of trouble,” jokes Drew Johnston as he reflects upon the college debt he already has and will incur. Johnston (not his real name) is a medical student at Washington University in St. Louis, Mo., who already has his undergraduate degree. With tuition at just over $50,000 per year, Johnston expects to have nearly $300,000 of college debt before he can add the M.D. at the end of his name. “Even though doctors can make good money, budgets are still tight during the first few years—well, it’s more like 10—after graduation,” he said.

While Johnston’s projected debt is not typical, nearly 67 percent of college undergraduates with four-year degrees have student loan debt when they graduate, according to an October 2012 report by The Institute for College Access & Success. This means that one in five households in the United States have college-related debt.

Breaking down college debt

Getting an education may be one of the more complicated financial decisions you’ll have to make in your life. The average amount of college debt graduates with four-year degrees face is nearly $27,000. However, this amount varies widely by state, school, living expenses and financial assistance. In reality, debt for undergrads ranges between $17,000 and $32,000. Factors that contribute to the cost:

- The school: Some universities and colleges cost more than others.
- Room and board: If you live on campus, you’ll have to pay to live in a dorm and eat in the cafeteria.
- Your major: Some areas of study require more expensive books and/or buying special supplies.
- Fees: They vary by school, but can include the cost of parking, transportation services, club memberships, the use of labs or equipment, having an on-campus mailbox, etc.
- Travel expenses: If you plan to commute to school, you need to consider the cost of gas or public transportation. On the other hand, if you live in a dorm, you’ll need to consider the cost of driving or flying home to see your family during breaks.
- Your state of residence: Some colleges and universities give discounted rates to students who live in the same state.

How much a college costs

When you visit your high school counseling office, career planning office or library, you’ll find a handful of books and magazines that tell you the average cost to attend the colleges that interest you. To get more detailed information, go to the colleges’ websites and look for the academics or admissions sections. With a little digging, you’ll find information about tuition and fees.

An even better option is a Financial Aid Shopping Sheet. Once a college or university accepts you as a student, it can send you a Shopping Sheet that clearly outlines the estimated cost of attendance (including the costs of tuition, fees, transportation, books, housing, meals and supplies) in a way that’s simple to understand. The sheet also includes information about the grants and scholarships you’ve received, options available to help you pay for school (like work-study programs and educational loans), graduation rates, loan default rates, average student loan amounts and your estimated monthly loan payment. Having a Shopping Sheet for each school of interest can help you and your family make an informed decision about the best fit for your budget.

How much to borrow

In “The Financial Aid Handbook: Getting the Education You Want for the Price You Can Afford,” authors Carol Stack and Ruth Vedvik recommend borrowing $8,000 or less per year. This way, when you graduate with a four-year degree, the amount borrowed is $32,000 or less—the average yearly salary a college grad can expect.

Federal student loans are the best way to go if you need to borrow money for school; they include options such as the Perkins loan, Stafford loan and Parent PLUS loan. Also available are private student loans, but they can be riskier and typically have high interest rates.

The benefits of college debt

In general, debt isn’t a good thing to have. But, if you want to go to college, debt is often a necessity. This irritates college graduate Mari Ellison: “There are so many countries that offer free college tuition because they want people to succeed and don’t want higher education to be a burden. I don’t get why people in the States have to get buried under so much debt in an attempt to get ahead. A lot of the people I went to college with had a hard time finding a job and were screwed when they had to start repaying their student loans; they had no money. A lot of the ones that got jobs worked at, like, supermarkets or department stores for minimum wage. How is this considered ‘getting ahead’?”

While the sour economy and high jobless rates make going to college and getting into debt seem counterintuitive, there are several advantages to going to college and owing money:

- Get a degree: For many, student loans provide the only financial means to go to college.
- Motivation: Once you’re in college, the debt will help motivate you to graduate. As the future Dr. Johnston puts it, “You don’t want to owe thousands of dollars for nothing.”
- A better chance at getting a job: The unemployment rate among those who don’t have college degrees is about 19 percent. On the other hand, only 8 percent of college grads are unemployed.
- Building up credit: The interest you pay on student loans is tax deductible. Plus, as Ellison points out, “College debt can be a ‘good’ debt. It gives you a simple way to get good credit for the future, like when you want to buy a car or a house. ...You have to think of the debt as an investment in your future.”

So, is college debt worth the trouble? The simple answer is yes, but only if you’re focused and determined to get a degree, and are willing to do the work necessary. “It’s smart if it’s enabling you to invest in your future,” said student financial aid expert Mark Kantrowitz in a 2011 interview with National Public Radio.

“There is no question that, on average, a college degree is still a very good investment. The unemployment rate for young adults who have just a high school diploma is more than twice the unemployment rate for those with a (bachelor’s degree),” said Lauren Asher, president of the Institute for College Access & Success, in an interview with Bankrate.com.

To learn more about student loans and all your options, talk to your high school’s college counselor or a financial counselor at the college of your choice, and your parents.

Paying it off

After you graduate from college, you have a six-month break (or grace period) before you need to start paying off your student loans. Here are some more terms that you should know about your debt and loan payments.

- Grants and scholarships: Financial aid that you don't have to repay.
- Work-study: A college work program through which you earn money that helps you pay for the cost of your education-related expenses.
- Loan calculator: An online tool that estimates your monthly loan payments. You can find a few at <http://www.direct.ed.gov/calc.html>.
- Federal loan: A loan from the government.
- Private loan: A loan from a private institution, like a bank.
- Loan term: The amount of time it takes to pay off a loan.
- Interest rate: The amount a lender charges to loan you money.
- Fixed interest rate: An interest rate that doesn't change during the term of the loan.
- Variable interest rate: An interest rate that can increase or decrease during the loan's term.
- Default: Nonpayment of a loan or missed payments. In 2011, about 8 to 13 percent of graduates defaulted on their student loans, according to The Institute for College Access & Success.

• Entrance and exit counseling: Financial counseling programs that help you understand the details about your student loan. This type of counseling helps you make wise borrowing decisions and set up a good repayment plan so you don't default.

• Income-Based Repayment (IBR): A payment plan for federal loans that bases your monthly payment on your income.

• Loan forgiveness: If you're in an IBR program, the debt you owe on a federal student loan is forgiven after 25 years. However, if you work for a nonprofit or public employer, your federal student loan is forgiven after 10 years.

Video advice on handling college debt comes from our Student Contributors:

Maria Maldonado – Address college debt step by step. <http://bit.ly/15oTAx2>

Leah Ferguson – If you can't avoid loans, pay attention to what kind you get. <http://bit.ly/15oTLIP>

Aubreigh Sabbota – Avoid debt with scholarships and financial aid. <http://bit.ly/YhIUZR> turn around!

The premier liberal arts college you've been looking for out east... just might be out west.

Whittier College
www.whittier.edu

GET INVOLVED!

The Student Paths Promise

- We do NOT sell your personal information
- We will NOT spam you
- We WILL help you prepare for your future

Results not your school TO SAVE MONEY

Have learned something to help me with my future?

Student Paths has saved me by being differently about:

Student Paths is relevant and so my level as a student:

I would like to receive additional free resources from Student Paths:

First Name: _____ Last Name: _____

High School: _____

Don't forget to complete the Student Impact Survey included with this issue!

- Request free information from colleges and military branches you are interested in
- Share your feedback and what you learned from Student Paths
- Request information on becoming a Student Paths student contributor

the Real Story

on life after high school

Our Real Story writers reflect on how they're progressing on their post-secondary path and what they've learned this year. They also offer advice based on their recent experiences.

The road I'm on: What the past year has taught me

— by Jelani Hayes

University of Pennsylvania, Philadelphia, Pa. • Hometown: Moreno Valley, Calif.

Hollywood casts high school as the Mecca of drama and rumors, as in “Mean Girls” and “Confessions of a Teenage Drama Queen.” But I don’t quite agree. Sure, high school can be an emotional journey. You gain friends. You lose friends. You aim for a reputation. You try to get rid of a reputation. You go through make-ups and breakups. But the great—and underappreciated—thing about high school is that at the end of each school day you get to go home and escape the rumors, drama, snickering.

This, however, is not true for college students who live on campus. College campuses can be very intimate, which makes privacy almost impossible.

The price of proximity

I think every college student should live in a dormitory at some point. Residential life makes school so much more fun. Never again will you have the opportunity to study, eat, sleep, and socialize 24/7 with a community of your peers.

On the other hand, when you live near your friends and classmates, privacy is a privilege few receive. Your roommate, for example, will know all of your habits, what you look like in the morning, who you talk to late at night, and how hygienic you are. Maybe these types of things are not huge concerns, but you will have to learn to be okay with your roommate knowing that you sometimes sleep with your mouth open. My freshman-year roommate and I got along really well, but it was a little embarrassing when she walked in on me dancing to my iPod.

But let’s assume that you and your roommate are besties, so you don’t have to worry about any awkward moments with him or her, nor do you have to worry about him or her telling anyone that you do, in fact, sleep with your mouth open. What about everybody else on the floor?

The RA? The security guard at the entrance? If the dorm is small enough, they’re likely to know who spends the night and the type of music you like to blast. But once again, maybe these are not huge concerns.

Rumors and reputations

What I have learned is a huge deal in college, however, is the reputation you make for yourself. It’s strange that on my college campus of approximately 10,000 undergraduates and 10,000 graduates it seems like more people know more things about me than they did in high school, but I believe that is due to the intimacy of living with your classmates.

For example, after going out on just a few dates, rumors began about whether I was in a relationship or not, among people I could barely call acquaintances. In my experience and from the advice of upperclassmen, it is generally best to try to keep your personal life private.

In another instance, a friend of mine often challenged her peers publicly on their opinions on hot issues, and while her intentions likely were to start meaningful discussion, she became known as a rude drama queen, and people began to distance themselves from her.

Another friend of mine was known as the future president of the United States because he always had a very “official” demeanor about him, but eventually people began to question whether he was taking himself too seriously. These reputations can spill over into faculty conversations and even in job interviews, so be careful.

Loving college, and learning to manage drama

All in all, however, I love college life, and I would not trade it for anything. Every day presents a new opportunity to learn how to best manage your personal and professional life. It’s a valuable experience, drama and all.

“I am hoping to get an internship for this summer. I would absolutely love to work in journalism or government. It would be awesome to intern in Los Angeles, San Francisco, Washington D.C., or New York City. Fingers crossed.”

Jelani Hayes

What are your plans for the summer?

“Aside from the inevitable summer job I’m going to attend fashion shows, concerts, art galleries, do photography, and hopefully attend a fashion program out in New York City.”

*Abby Johnson
University of Wisconsin-Stout,
Menomonie, Wis.
Hometown: Eagan, Minn.*

“... Hopefully get a job and earn some money. ... I also want to just spend time with friends and family that I don’t get to see during the school year. ... It will be awesome to have three whole months that I can spend with them!”

*Leah Ferguson
Wellesley College, Wellesley, Mass.
Hometown: Minneapolis, Minn.*

“I have a public accounting internship lined up ... and I am planning on registering for two summer courses in order to reach the 150 credit requirement for the CPA exam. ... Also, since I have not been able to play hockey during the winter, I am hoping to join a local league.”

*Jordan Sweigart
Assumption College, Worcester, Mass.
Hometown: Reading, Pa.*

Para disfrutar la vida, aprecia a las personas y oportunidades que te rodean

Ferris State University, Big Rapids, Mich. • Origen: Niles, Mich.

En este último año, he pasado de ser alguien que quería trabajar en una empresa a alguien que prefiere trabajar en una organización sin fines de lucro sirviendo a la gente. No puedo decir que fue un momento específico que me hizo cambiar de idea, fue un proceso largo en el que muchas puertas se me cerraron y otras se abrieron.

Este año he aprendido a apreciar lo que tengo, y no anhelar lo que no tengo. Hay tanta gente luchando para conseguir trabajo y mantener a sus familias, y aun así hay tantas personas que van a la universidad, encuentran un trabajo bien remunerado y nunca paran a pensar en las personas a su alrededor que tanto necesitan. Si tú eres así, no te estoy criticando, simplemente estoy describiendo lo que estoy aprendiendo en la universidad.

Otra cosa que he aprendido es que debo aprovechar los recursos y las oportunidades que ofrece el campus universitario. Sin duda algunas de esas oportunidades son los tutores y la biblioteca, pero yo me refiero a la diversión. Nuestro campus, por ejemplo, tiene una piscina que nunca está muy llena de gente y también un jacuzzi. Hay mesas de ping-pong, billares y televisores en todas partes, juegos de mesa y un montón de otras cosas.

Asiste a los diferentes juegos deportivos. Hay tantas cosas para hacer en campus (y si vives en una ciudad grande, seguramente habrá muchas cosas para hacer fuera del campus universitario) no existen excusas para no divertirse.

También he aprendido a disfrutar de la gente que me rodea y a invertir más de mí en las relaciones con las que he sido bendecido. Hay muchas oportunidades de hacer amistades con gente con la que tienes muy pocas cosas en común solo para darte cuenta de que en cuanto esa similitud se desvanece, la amistad se acaba rápidamente. Yo comparo estas amistades con otras que he hecho en las que he invertido mi tiempo y no hace falta hacer nada y solo pasar el tiempo es divertido.

Lo más importante que he aprendido es a relajarme y dejar que la vida me dicte el camino. Mi fe es una parte muy importante de esta nueva filosofía, pero anímate a probarla. Puse tanto esfuerzo en mis planes para la universidad y mi vida más allá de la universidad y he tenido tantos altibajos que he tenido que cambiar mi camino varias veces.

Mi vida se verá definida por las oportunidades que se me presenten y por la forma en que respondo a esas no por el plan de 5 años que tengo en mi mente. La universidad es un gran lugar siempre y cuando mantengas tus prioridades, puedes convertirte en una gran persona.

En un hueco o no, no dejes que las oportunidades se te escapen.

CUNY Hunter College, N.Y. • Origen: Ramapo, N.Y.

En algún momento de tu vida te sentirás decepcionado porque las cosas no irán como lo esperabas y comenzarás a analizar los eventos que te llevaron a ese hueco en el que te encuentras, tratando de descubrir que sucedió.

En los últimos 3 semestres me he sentido en unos cuantos huecos. Pensé en las cosas que hice y las que deje de hacer en la escuela secundaria, las decisiones que tome para prepararme para la universidad y las aspiraciones que lleve conmigo a Hunter. Me di cuenta que la mayoría de lo que había planeado no sucedió y me pregunte, "Porque deje pasar esas oportunidades?"

El año pasado me ha enseñado muchas cosas, lo más interesante que aprendí es que nunca debes dejar buenas oportunidades pasar de largo. Los adultos te dicen que la universidad serán los mejores cuatro años de tu vida. Pero la universidad puede ser el mejor tiempo de tu vida si tú pones esfuerzo para hacer que así sea.

Vivo bastante lejos de la ciudad. El tiempo y el dinero que necesito para viajar de casa a la escuela, ha afectado la mayoría de mis decisiones de participar en actividades. Por ejemplo, cada año, la revista literaria y de arte de la Universidad Hunter organiza talleres de lectura de poesía y otros eventos relacionados con el arte. Como alguien que aspira a ser escritor, me hubiera gustado asistir a esos eventos. Desafortunadamente esos eventos ocurren en horas de la noche y teniendo dos horas de viaje a mi casa no podría tener una buena noche de descanso para levantarme temprano para mis clases de la mañana.

Perderse algunos eventos artísticos no parece nada muy importante. Pero aprendí que demorar hacer algo que me interesa podría convertirse en un mal hábito. Las clases y otras obligaciones te mantienen ocupado y de repente te das cuenta de que no tienes tiempo para otras actividades interesantes.

Conflictos en tu agenda siempre sucederán y tratar de manejar tu tiempo te parecerá abrumador. Todas las responsabilidades y oportunidades que debes tener en cuenta te hacen sentir confuso y sin salida.

Es necesario pasar por tiempos malos para lograr aprender cuáles son tus prioridades. Que te importa a ti? Que puedes dejar libre sin arrepentirte? Que te hace feliz? Hacerte estas preguntas te ayudara a conocerte más y a decidir qué quieres hacer de tu vida sin importar que planear hacer cuando termines la escuela secundaria.

Hasta ahora mi experiencia universitaria me ha enseñado que seguir hacia adelante es la clave para conquistar el miedo al fracaso. Tener una actitud positiva te ayudara a buscar nuevas oportunidades. Ten en cuenta que tu estas en control de tu felicidad.

Jordan Harper

Anjelica M. Enaje

See what advice our Real Story team has for you.

Have a smart phone? Scan the QR code. Or you can use the link to view the videos. Either way, you're sure to find some helpful tips on preparing for your future from these college students.

Alyssa McComb:

Do what you love: Whether you're planning to go to college or not, there's a job or vocation out there for you.

<http://bit.ly/VZuDqg>

Jordan Harper:

Be open to change and unexpected things that might come your way, otherwise opportunities will pass you by.

<http://bit.ly/XmfFry>

Natalia Naranjo:

Don't lose sight of what you want: The freedom and responsibilities of college life can distract even dedicated students.

<http://bit.ly/ZmOfYk>

Jordan Sweigart:

Regularly challenging yourself to try new things will help prepare you for everyday ups and downs as well as unexpected changes.

<http://bit.ly/ZmOfYk>

Macaela Bennett:

Don't study just for the test! Get in the habit of really learning and retaining material so you can build on it after high school.

<http://bit.ly/WFEgrl>

Be a standout jobseeker — by Patrick Noonan

Separate yourself from the pack with preparation, professionalism and persistence.

Let's face it: The economy still is in bad shape. It hasn't been this hard for people to find steady jobs since the Great Depression. And if you're a high school student or a recent grad, times are even tougher. You probably don't have a lot of job experience on your résumé, and you'll be competing against older workers who do. You have to be ready to meet the challenge.

"If people are persistent enough, they can find a job," says Matt Strey, who as a high school senior from St. Peter, Minn., put his persistence to work to make some extra cash one summer, eventually landing two jobs. One was as a server in a fast food restaurant, and the other was working as a janitor at Gustavus Adolphus, the local college.

Draw on your personal connections

To help find his summer employment, Matt used one of the most invaluable skills any job-hunter can have: networking. "I had an 'in' at both places," Matt says. He learned about the janitorial position through a family member, and he learned about the server position from a friend he met on the track team.

If you have friends, family members, classmates or former co-workers who might help you find a job or put in a good word for you, don't be afraid to ask them. For every personal connection you don't ask, that's one fewer chance you'll have of finding the job you're looking for.

Unfortunately, networking can't work for everyone—especially not in today's employment market. Simply, there's too much competition for the same jobs right now in almost all parts of the economy.

How to really stand out from the crowd

You have to make sure you take great care in how you present yourself to employers. Take steps to make sure that your application is the best it can possibly be, or you won't be able to compete. And as the most important thing you can have on your application is prior work experience, it's crucial that you get such experience under your belt—something that'll be hard to do if you don't present yourself well to hiring employers.

"For the most part, young people need that first job opportunity to provide references and skills to get that next job," says Marc Geiselhart, who as a Program Director with the Youth and Young Parent Division of the Employment Action Center in Minneapolis, Minn., helped teens and young adults snag crucial first jobs for more than 15 years.

Geiselhart says that the first thing you should do when looking for a job is to consider your strengths and experiences. Let's say you have experience working as a waiter, for instance. As you fill in the "Job Experience" section of your application and résumé, don't just put "waiter." Get specific! Write what your duties were: "served customers; handled money; cleaned premises; opened and closed restaurant." Don't be afraid to brag about your past experiences. If you don't, no one will.

Help yourself by helping others

If you have no work history, Geiselhart says, you can list other experiences—especially if you have volunteered.

In fact, volunteer experience is helpful on two levels: Not only does it show that you know how to work, it also says a lot about what kind of person you are. Volunteer experience is so valuable for job-seekers that you will be doing yourself (and your community) a big favor by volunteering today—even while you're looking for a paying job.

To find volunteer opportunities, check with your school, your church, hospitals, parks, nursing homes, non-profits, and any other group you can think of. These organizations need your help now more than ever. Opportunities abound. And you never know—connections you make volunteering could help you find a paying job down the road.

Whatever you do, don't give up. Somewhere out there, a job is waiting for you. Just remember: The only way to find it is to keep looking. ➤

FIND YOUR CALLING. IGNITE YOUR PASSIONS.

- » 60+ Academic Programs
- » Financial aid available
- » Distinctly Christian community
- » Beautiful campus located 10 miles east of Seattle, overlooking Lake Washington and the Cascade Mountains
- » 17:1 student to faculty ratio
- » Distinguished Faculty

Questions? Contact our Admissions Office at 800.669.3781 or admissions@northwestu.edu.

CORBAN: DEDICATED

TO YOUR FUTURE
TO YOUR CHARACTER
TO YOUR EXPERIENCE

DEDICATING HEART AND MIND TO GOD

- > Recognized for a unique emphasis on developing academic and spiritual strengths.
- > Over 50 majors and programs of study including 15 study abroad programs.
- > 13:1 student to faculty ratio.
- > 13 intercollegiate sports competing in NAIA.
- > Ranked by U.S. News & World Report as a top ten school in the West for Bachelor's degrees.

5000 Deer Park Drive SE
Salem, Oregon 97317
800.845.3005
www.corban.edu

10 money-saving tips for high school and college

— by Flora Richards-Gustafson

One of the sweet things about being in high school is that life is still somewhat inexpensive – and maybe you're still getting an allowance. But are you ready for the funds to stop flowing once you graduate? Being an adult means having the ability to fend for yourself financially. Whether you're a freshman or a senior, it's never too early – or too late – to start saving money and spending smarter.

These tips will help put your finances on the right track as you make your way through high school, college and beyond.

1 → Learn to budget. A financial plan that lists the money you earn and your expenses, a budget helps you see the big picture regarding the amount of money you have, your spending habits and savings goals.

Your high school budget is pretty simple. The money coming in is usually from your allowance and/or part-time job. The money you spend goes toward socializing, buying gas (if you drive), music, and other fun things. When you set up a budget, you know exactly how much you need to save to help you reach financial goals, such as buying a car, an outfit for prom or college textbooks.

2 → Spend less than you have, and carry less cash.

Smart money management requires spending only the cash you have so you don't go into debt, which will cost you big in the future. And if you make a habit of carrying less cash when you go out, you won't be able to give in to impulse-buy temptations.

3 → Get a job – or create one. While this seems obvious, it can be hard for a high school student to find work. Some jobs to consider include babysitting, yard care, pet-sitting, tutoring and helping people move. If you're not able to find odd jobs around town, consider volunteering so you get the work experience to make your job application look stellar.

4 → Avoid credit cards at all costs. Once you turn 18, you'll see offers for them everywhere. There's something so alluring and adult-like about having a credit card. But what credit card companies don't tell you is that people between the ages of 18 and 22 with credit cards owe an average of $3,173, according to CreditCards.com. Don't start your adult life in a financial hole.

5 → Make and stick to a savings plan. Having a savings plan will make you financially savvy. Consider opening a teen or student savings account.

Then regularly deposit a certain amount of your allowance or paycheck and watch it grow.

6 → Take advantage of student status. When you're in high school and college, a lot of things are cheaper. Never be afraid to ask a business if they offer a student discount. The money you save getting free tickets into museums and discounted movie theater admission will add up fast.

7 → Cut out unnecessary expenses, BYO.

The little things add up quickly. The snacks you buy in the cafeteria: How much do they cost every week? How much would you save if you brought the same snack from home? If you spend $1.50 on a soda every day at school, you're spending $7.50 per week, $32.50 per month or about $292 every school year. Likewise, snacks at movie theaters and events are very expensive. When possible, bring your own.

8 → Buy used, sell used.

From cars and clothes to books and music, when buying you'll have the same things as those who pay the price for new, but you'll have extra cash in your wallet. Turning that around, your unwanted items are a source of revenue: Consign them, have a yard sale, or sell them online.

9 → Shop smart. Scour the newspaper and Internet for coupons. Wait for sales. Dollar stores offer much of the same merchandise as discount and drug stores – snacks and drinks, toiletries, school supplies and novelties – but often for a fraction of the price.

10 → Take high school classes that give you college credit and/or take CLEP exams. Take AP classes that give you college credits. Or, if you really rock at a subject, take a CLEP exam, pass it and get the college credit without setting foot in a college classroom.

VIDEO

Student contributor Abby Anfinson shares thrifty ideas -- from eats to savvy shopping and movie nights. <http://bit.ly/15oUdGP>

Be Known

at one of America's top-ranked Christian Colleges
(Forbes 2012)

To be known. It's the hope each student brings to the college experience. To be known by name. To be valued, encouraged and uplifted. When students become known at George Fox, things change. Knowledge moves from the mind to the heart. Careers turn into callings. Faith turns into action. And that's why we make a simple promise: that each student will be known.

GEORGE FOX
UNIVERSITY

Oregon's Nationally Recognized
Christian University

yourlife.georgefox.edu
facebook.com/georgefoxuniversity
E-mail: admissions@georgefox.edu

Math and Science Help
You need it
We have it

alleyoop™

Join Alleyoop for free
because getting ready for college is more than just getting in.

alleyoop.com/StudentPaths

DIARY of a SENIOR

Alex Buley
DeSales High School
Walla Walla, Wash.

Outgoing advice to my fellow high school students

Over the course of my high school years, I have learned a lot about myself and my relationships with others. Looking back, I have made a lot of mistakes, but I have learned from every one of them. Every teenager finds their parents annoying at some point, but it is important to remain respectful. They are there to help you. For example, my mother has never helped me with regular homework like math, but when it comes to helping me write a speech or give a presentation, she always steps up.

Valuing family and friends

My mother is not the typical cookie-cutter homemaker. She does not cook dinner, or shower me with sympathy when I am feeling bad, but she has taught me to be tough and independent, clean and organized, and always put together. I love my mom, and I appreciate all the things she does for me like cleaning and gardening so we have a nice house. Although I struggle to be grateful all the time, I am trying to be more patient. I wish I had realized earlier how important my parents are.

In addition to having a wonderful family, I have been blessed with a lovely group of friends. However, at the start of high school, I was friends with people who did not make me feel good about myself and did not appreciate me. I was afraid to branch out from this circle. Eventually, I met some girls a year older who are truly my best friends. They make me a better person, and we complement each other. I am still friendly to the other girls, but I don't spend time with them. It is important to surround yourself with people who help you to be a better version of yourself. It is also important to treat everyone with kindness.

Significant others

I've had one boyfriend, and he lasted almost a year. I am not condemning high

Check out the following videos!

Senior Diary writers offer insights and advice on a variety of topics.

Jenna Hubaishy: Develop an organized plan for approaching life after graduation.
<http://bit.ly/UxJ97e>

Elisha Brown: Tips on staying accountable and becoming more self-reliant.
<http://bit.ly/XWiFfx>

Samantha Ickes: Advice on handling the challenges and changes that await graduates.
<http://bit.ly/VyRjOR> school relationships, but I do think they are a distraction. High school really leaves no time to date. You should be focusing on school work, activities, friends. Having a significant other often takes away from friends and can cause conflict. College is a better time to date because you are more mature and have more time. If you date in high school, make sure you are friends first. Always be kind, especially if you break up.

Take time to relax

High school is stressful, and at times it feels overwhelming. I learned to take time for myself and meditate; often this is in prayer. When I put aside my problems and open my mind to God, I feel tranquility and rejuvenation. I remind myself often that there is no sense worrying about things that haven't happened when you could be doing what needs to be done now.

High school goes by quickly. The things I regret the most are coming to school upset, when I could have been pleasant and happy. I regretted not trying new things and decided to change that: I tried my hand in the school play as stage manager, I was elected class president, and I took on odd jobs around the school.

High school is your last chance to be a kid. Be smart, have fun, and work to make yourself a better person, because soon you won't be a kid anymore.

Majoring in Finance.
Guard is helping finance it.
Chose the National Guard because it's about community.
Love the part-time aspect. Being a Citizen-Soldier is a family tradition.

Learn more about the money, the purpose and the tradition. Visit NATIONALGUARD.com.

NATIONAL GUARD  NATIONALGUARD.com